

Directory of the Nuremberg Military Tribunals' Personnel in January 1948

Introduction

Living in postwar Nuremberg: an eyewitness report

Directory of Personnel

Secretary General for Military Tribunals

Introduction

This is an edition of the "Justice Telephone Directory: Military Tribunals, Office of Chief of Counsel for War Crimes [OCCWC], Office of the Secretary General [for Military Tribunals]. Corrected to 20 January 1948, issued by Signal Office OCCWC."

When we examined our copy of these 53 mimeographed pages in our possession, we found it to be a valuable source for biographical information on trials' staff which followed the International Military Tribunal (IMT) since 1946. For this reason we transcribed the directory's sections "Alphabetical Listing of Personnel" and "Secretary General for Military Tribunals", the latter listing the courts and judges still in action in 1948. What we left out were the sections which give no biographical information but ranks, functions or the names of divisions only. Also we did not transfer the phone numbers (for obvious reasons).

To us as researchers on the region's local contemporary history the addresses of the staff members are of almost the same importance as their names and functions because they show interesting concentrations of their residential areas in particular quarters of Nuremberg, Fürth, Stein and Zirndorf. Hence we tried to eliminate typing errors wherever possible and to verify the exact location of the residences by adding in brackets the town names outside the inner perimeter of Nuremberg.

The original alphabetical order of the directory was not altered because the various options to search for particular names electronically makes this kind of laborious work superfluous. The result is a list containing 741 entries which is offering a broad scale of opportunities to evaluate the information under various aspects, e.g. that Chief Prosecutor Telford Taylor was a temporary inhabitant of Fürth's upper class suburb of Dambach or the important role of German emigrants in the prosecution of Nazi war crimes.

Living in postwar Nuremberg: an eyewitness report

“At the outset I lived in the Grand Hotel, and I can remember tarpaulins flapping over holes in the structure and the bags of water, chemically treated, in all the corridors for drinking purposes. Then I moved to a house in the suburbs, Novalisstraße 33, with six other British girls. The daughter of the house was in attendance to keep the place clean. It must have been a humiliation for her. It was all very strained at first, and I felt sorry for her, but we got to like her extremely well. Her family were supposed to have been Nazis; of course they claimed that they had to join the Nazi party, otherwise their lives would have been made miserable. But we kept off awkward subjects with her. [...] The centre of Nuremberg seemed to be all rubble, apart from the Grand Hotel and the Opera House, which were still standing. The Opera House was used as a cinema for Allied personnel, and upstairs were a dance-hall and a club for American enlisted personnel. I can vividly remember a smell of death in that building. I assumed that it came from rotting bodies somewhere nearby - in the adjoining building, perhaps, or in drains. There must have been a lot of people buries in that city, under the rubble. And when we walked through the centre of the city the same smell was wafting around. But out where we lived, in the suburbs, there seemed to be very little bomb damage.”

Report of Jean Tull, secretary at the Nuremberg Trials, taken from the book by Hilary Gaskin: Eyewitnesses at Nuremberg. London, Arms and Armour Press 1990, p. 114 - 115.
